RE: Application by The Joint Commission for Deeming Authority for Psychiatric Hospitals

Dear Dr. Berwick:

On behalf of our more than 5,000 member hospitals, health systems and other health care organizations, and our 40,000 individual members, the American Hospital Association (AHA) strongly supports The Joint Commission’s application for deeming authority for the accreditation of psychiatric hospitals that wish to participate in the Medicare or Medicaid programs. Currently, The Joint Commission is the nation’s largest health care accrediting organization, accrediting approximately 88 percent of the country’s hospitals.

The Joint Commission’s set of accreditation standards go beyond the minimum requirements of the Medicare Conditions of Participation and focus on key functional areas within a psychiatric hospital. The standards examine not only an organization’s readiness to provide safe, high-quality care, but also its actual performance. The Joint Commission’s standards set forth performance expectations for activities that affect the safety and quality of patient care. The standards run the gamut from patient rights and medication management, to how the hospital collects data on its performance and uses that data to improve itself. If a psychiatric hospital does the right things and does them well, there is a strong likelihood that its patients will experience good outcomes. The Joint Commission develops its psychiatric standards in consultation with health care experts, providers, purchasers and consumers and continually updates the standards as science and preferred practices evolve. Therefore, the AHA urges the Centers for Medicare & Medicaid to approve The Joint Commission’s application for deeming authority for psychiatric hospitals.
We appreciate the opportunity to comment on The Joint Commission’s application for deeming authority for psychiatric hospitals. If you have any questions, please contact me or Nancy Foster, vice president of quality and patient safety policy, at (202) 626-2337 or nfoster@aha.org.

Sincerely,

Rick Pollack
Executive Vice President
