

There are some wounds even teaching hospitals can't heal.

But Congress can.

Teaching hospitals are where millions of Americans turn for specialized surgeries, life-saving care and complex treatments. They're where thousands of doctors and nurses receive training that will benefit communities across the country, including rural areas where caregivers are desperately needed. And now, these hospitals must play a vital role in homeland security. But the recent five-year $4.2 billion Medicare cut puts many of these services at risk.

Prescription drug coverage for seniors is critical. At the same time, Congress needs to restore funding for the hospitals that help bring medicines and vital care to Americans young and old.

RESTORE IME FUNDING. THE CUTS HURT TOO MUCH.

AMERICAN HOSPITAL ASSOCIATION | ASSOCIATION OF AMERICAN MEDICAL COLLEGES